Any good prospects for her in Waimanalo?

Better than you think. Ilima Ramseyer cleaned airplanes for 15 years until her airline decided it couldn't use her anymore. What could have been a big family crisis, became Ms. Ramseyer's big opportunity.

This year she learned CAD (Computer-Aided Design), thanks to the people at Hawaiian Homestead Technology and an initiative of the Council for Native Hawaiian Advancement. Because this economic development program exists, Ms. Ramseyer mastered vectors and abstract interpretation, and how to match an engineer's drawing within a variance of .005.

How good is she? Try an accuracy rate of 99.8 percent.

Ilima Ramseyer isn't picking up after tourists anymore. She's helping create the future.

Enterprise Honolulu celebrates Ms. Ramseyer's success. And best of all, economic development in Waimanalo, that helps keep the country, country.
